Niles Paulsen, of Fort Hamilton, had never seen a heach inspector, and would never have known there was such an office had he not read of it in the news-

When the hearing was over, Senator Mulin remarked:

"The day of those fellows is about over."

That is what put the "boss" in bad humor this morning. It is merely a question of time—a short time, too—when the office of State Shore Inspector will be abolished. With the loss of this office, which he has held many years, and his dethronement in, New Utrecht, the outleok is black for the man who has held the town in his grasp so long.

Stripped of his power, he will have to answer the charges which have so long been pending, and which he has been able to throttle time and time again. The scambalous contracts by which he has burdened the town with debt in order that he and his cronies might be enriched, will be thoroughly investigated, he inside facts regarding the infrmous Incortants Home job will be exposed and the accounts of the town will be overhauled.

Altogether, there is no wonder "Boss" Furgueson was in bad humor this morning. At last he reads the writing on the wall.
